February Director's Message

The knife is probably the most useful of all common tools used by man. From it's appearance on the scene, man's well being took a turn for the better.

For the seed stock breeder it is probably the most important tool he can use to improve his herd. It's not all that unusual to hear someone say "I keep all my bull calves and let the buyer decide which ones are best." They remind me of the guy who said: "I'm their leader so I guess I'd better follow them."

I believe we in FBA are where we are today, with the best beef animal anywhere, because Mr. Tom knew where he wanted to go with his cattle, and set guidelines (the six essentials) to follow that haven't been improved upon and then culled ruthlessly to achieve his goals.

In the June 1990 Foundation Facts, then president Gayle Evans passed along some information from a roundtable discussion on bull selection by those present at the May director's meeting. I believe some excerpts should be quoted again. "Each director was asked to explain how he decides which bull calves to keep and offer for sale as breeding bulls. All of the directors indicated that only 25 to 50% of their male calves qualify as bulls, the average being the 30 to 40% range. Dale Lasater was there and mentioned that only about 50% of their bull calves are offered as breeding bulls."

The first person to be hurt when we sell a bull below par is the buyer. The second is the breeder who sells him and in turn the Beefmaster breed itself. If we are in doubt about whether a bull is a keeper or not, he probably isn't.

We've got a good thing going. Let's keep it that way. Don't be afraid to use that pocket knife!

March Director's Message

The FBA Board of Directors will be meeting in Denver, May 3 and 4. All committees will meet at that time to plan for FBA's future and will make recommendations to the Board.

All FBA members are welcome and encouraged to attend committee and Board meetings, but since this is not possible for most members, I feel it is important to remind you that the business of the Association is carried on at this meeting and the annual convention.

The Board wants and needs your input. This is your Association. You have elected Board members to represent you but they appreciate hearing from the membership on issues that will be discussed.

In late November a committee of six FBA members met with six representatives of BBU at their request. Although no decisions were reached or agreements made, it was an interesting meeting. A report on that meeting will be given to the Board in May. They will then decide if they want to continue discussions with BBU.

As you know from reading the minutes of the November 1990 General Membership meeting, the finance committee will be presenting recommendations regarding fee schedule changes. In order to grow and accomplish our goals the Association must generate funds. Our budget is relatively small, and although we are financially healthy, there is a need for more capital if we hope to provide more services for the membership. It is only fair that you, as a member, should have something to say on this matter as it may affect dues, cost of certificates or transfers or inventory fees.

The public relations committee would like to hear how you feel about the current advertising program and if you have any ideas that would be helpful to the satellites.

The membership committee is always open to suggestions for increasing membership and membership services.

Please remember that the Board want to hear from you. If you have an idea or suggestion, pick up the phone or write a letter before May 3. The time to let your opinions be known is before decisions are made.

Bev Sparrow

I am always going home and telling Bob that so and so says to say Hi. He asked me to put a hello from him in this months F.F. and to say that he knows when I am gone on a seminar or whatever he doesn't have to be worried about me cause I'm with the best people he ever met. He also gave me the article about Gossip for F.F. He makes my job so much easier by being so supportive. Better not say any more (I don't want him to get a swelled head).

FBA member and former director, Charles Duree, III has taken on new duties in addition to his Beefmaster operation. Our thanks to Shelby Phillips, III for sending us a copy of the following article.

Ex-Marine gambles on saving souls as Downs chaplain

By THOMAS J. SULLIVAN
The New Mexican Staff

LBUQUERQUE — Charles Duree's call to the post didn't come from a trumpeter.

He says it came from God.

Two weeks ago, under the auspices of Race Track Chaplaincy of America, based in Long Branch, N.J., Duree became the chaplain at The Downs at Albuquerque.

But Duree, 52, isn't there to denounce gambling or preach in the paddock. He's there for the people who's livelihood depends on the racetrack — everyone from DUREE jockeys to hired hands.

"A lot of people say 'How can you want to go work with the people on the back side some call riffraff?'" Duree said. "We'll I say 'Where did Jesus go?' He went where there were people in need. These are good people."

Dressed in a cowboy hat, boots, denim jeans, a plaid sweater and tinted eye glasses, Duree dwells and drifts about the back side of the track, remaining relatively inconspicuous.

And that's the way he wants it.

"Nothing against the pastors that wear suits, but I wear boots and sweaters and I ride around here and that way these guys can relate to me," said Duree, who grew up in Oklahoma.

A closer look, however, reveals the hat band that reads "Jesus is Lord" and the red-covered bible in his hand.

"God has called me to the racetrack," Duree says.

But Duree, who owns a ranch in Roy, N.M., hasn't always been a pastor. A retired U.S. Marine captain, Duree served 20 years, including two tours in Vietnam. While in the Marines, Duree competed in rodeo as a team roper and still competes in amateur events.

"I have not been a Christian my entire life," he said. "I didn't come to the Lord until 1974," a year before retiring from the Marines.

In 1981, Duree became involved with the Fellowship of Christian Athletes in Roy, which put him in touch with the RTCA.

Now, Duree spends several days a week living on the track's back side and attending to the needs of the people there.

"Basically, your ministry on this back side is a one-on-one ministry," Duree said. "For the people that live in the back side, it gets pretty lonely once the sun goes down and I like to live on the back side with them."

Duree's tasks don't begin and end with the teaching and preaching of the scriptures. He's working to set up substance abuse counseling, a food-and-clothing bank, a literacy program and medical care.

"I'm in the process of trying to find a Christian eye doctor and dentist that would donate their services," Duree said.

The Downs at Albuquerque management has provided Duree with room and board, a man in Oklahoma provides Duree, who commutes back to Roy a few times each week, with fuel.

"What I'm here for really is just to tell them about Jesus and to fulfill their need, whatever it is."

And when it comes to different faiths, Duree says it's not a problem.

"There's a lot of Catholics and a lot of Baptists and that's why the racetrack ministry is very emphatic about being trans-denominational."

Polly Miller, assistant general manager at The Downs, said the racetrack likes having a chaplain.

"We run a small town at a racetrack, which a lot of people forget," Miller said. "We have our own emergency medical service.

We have our own water department. And, just like a town, we have all the services that could be offered.

"We have a lot of people around here that are transient and don't have a community and if we can have someone like Charlie, then I'm really happy about it.

"He's really out for the welfare of all of us."

1991 Southwest Mississippi Gain on Forage Bull Test

Beef cattle breeders across the South have found forage testing bulls to be the most economical means of developing and proving young sires. The Southwest Mississippi Forage Tested Bull program at Tylertown is fast becoming one of the leading forage test stations in the South. Frank Holmes, Test Manager, indicated that bull consignments on this year's test have risen 73% above the 1990 test. The 1991 test began November 1, with 135 bulls. Over 100 of these bulls will sell at the Livestock Producers Sale Facility on Highway 98, Tylertown, 1:00 p.m., Saturday, April 13, 1991.

Buyers have found these young forage-tested bulls to be hardened, pasture-conditioned bulls that can go to work and breed cows without falling apart. Also, these bulls offer cattlemen some of the best genetic material the South has to offer. Because cattle in the South have to perform on grass, it makes sense for beef producers to purchase forage-tested bulls that have proven their ability to perform on grass. Cows sired by top performing forage-tested bulls will be more efficient at converting grass into heavier weaning weights. The greatest bonus comes from the fact that forage-tested bulls can go to work at an earlier age, allowing buyers to purchase top genetics at lower costs.

The 1991 gain-on-forage test has consignments composed of 26 Angus, 27 FBA Beefmasters, 5 BBU Beefmasters, 4 Brangus, 6 Charolais, 12 Horned herefords, 19 Polled Herefords, 4 Red Brangus, 1 Simbrah, and 20 Simmentals. These bulls represent the top genetics from some of the best cattle breeders in the South.

Thirteen of these bulls have a weight per day of age over 2.5 pounds while 109 of the bulls have a weight per day of age of over two pounds. Fifty-one bulls have gained over 200 pounds during the first 84 days of the test, and the top ten bulls have averaged gaining 3.2 pounds per day on test. With 66 days to go on the 150 day test, several bulls have a chance to break the record of 3.95 pounds per day set by a Wallace Beefmaster bull in the 1986 test.

The bulls currently on test also have good milking mothers, 205 day weaning weights range from 450 to 760 pounds. None of the bulls were creep fed. All bulls have been developed on grass.

Economically important traits being evaluated include birth weight, weaning weight, gain on grass, weight per day of age, frame score, pelvic area, scrotal circumference, backfat thickness and ribeye area. The bulls are on the MIMS health program, will be examined for breeding soundness, and issued health papers prior to the April 13 sale.

Southern Beefmaster Breeders, a satellite of the Foundation Beefmaster Association, selected the Southwest Mississippi gain-on-forage test as their official 1991 breed test. Eight Southern Beefmaster Breeders from Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, and North Carolina have consigned 27 bulls to the test. These breeders have five bulls among the top ten performers, and they also have the top 205-day weaning weight of 760 pounds.

Beef cattle breeders from five states have assembled their top bulls at Tylertown for what is gearing up to be the "Great Showdown on Grass." Purebred and commercial cattlemen should make the forage-tested bull sale at Tylertown their preferred source of bulls. Plan to attend activities at the Livestock Producers Sale Facility near Tylertown, April 13, and take advantage of opportunities that will improve your operation.

For more information about the Southwest Mississippi Gain-on-Forage Test, contact Lamar Adams, Walthall County Agent at (601) 876-4021, 250 Ball Avenue, Tylertown, MS 39667. Or, you may telephone Frank Holmes, Test Manager, at (601) 876-5204.

135 bulls head for grass on the Southwest Mississippi Forage Test. The bulls are being gain tested at HHH Farms and will sell in the Southwest Mississippi Forage Test Sale at Tylertown, April 13.

ISA Cattle Company - Press Release

Buyers from seven states and Mexico were in San Angelo Saturday, February 23, 1991, for the Isa Cattle Company, Inc. spring bull sale, paying out nearly $400,000 for more than 200 head.

The 213 bulls offered brought a total of $398,750, and averaged $1,872.06 per head.

Laurie Lasater, president of the San Angelo, Texas based firm, said he was extremely pleased with the way the bulls sold.

"It was an excellent sale," Lasater said, noting that the bulls didn't sell too high, allowing buyers to have a selection of bulls in their particular price range.

Buyers were listed from Arizona, California, New Mexico, Mississippi, Kansas, Oregon and Florida. Five ranchers at the sale were from the Mexican states of Chihuahua, Sonora and Coahuila.

The top selling bull, a March 1989 calf bred by Lasater, brought $4,300 and went to Fernando A. Gonzalez of Chihuahua. Gonzalez bought a total of four bulls for $10,800.

The top volume buyer of bulls was Enrique Perez Pria of Chihuahua City, Mexico, who bought 30 head for $57,200.

Other volume bull buyers included Baboquivara Cattle Company of Tucson, Arizona, 16 bulls, $26,450; Jesus Yuren, Rancho Las Palomas, Hermosillo, Sonora, Mexico, 13 bulls, $22,400; Bill Nash and Blue Oaks Farms of Hunt, 11 bulls, $22,900; Gene Riecke and Bev Cattle Company of Corsicana, 8 bulls, $16,550; Mar D Ranch of White's City, NM, 6 bulls, $12,300; George Blackmon of Bowie, 5 bulls, $7,700; Lazy VL Ranch of Encino, NM, 4 bulls, $7,700; Federico Creel S.L., Rancho San Nicholas, Chihuahua, Mexico, 4 bulls, $6,900; Myrtle Cox of Quemado, NM, 4 bulls, $10,000; and Richard S. Smith of Hunt, 3 bulls, $6,050.

Isa also offered 86 commercial heifers, which brought $69,660 and averaged $810 per head.

Miguel Vega of Miami, Florida was top female buyer, taking 37 head for $33,170. Other volume buyers of females were Tommy Sanders of Hamilton, Mississippi, 28 females, $20,520; and Scott Faulkenberry of Floydada, 10 females, $8,100.

Beef must beat poultry in export game

Faced with a growing competitive threat from the poultry industry, US beef producers must look to new export markets or risk further erosion of their market share, says Tom Morgan, a prominent livestock analyst.

The US beef industry has to aggressively pursue export markets to keep cattle prices at profitable levels. If not, Morgan said, beef demand could continue to lose market share to the broiler industry, which has boosted its share of total US meat consumption by adopting ways to reduce production costs.

"The thing that will drive changes in the cattle industry in the next 10 years is what will be going on in poultry," Morgan said.

Morgan, president of Sterling Research Corp., said chicken processors were able to increase consumer demand for chicken by shifting their marketing strategy to increasing sales of certain parts rather than selling the entire bird. Morgan cited data showing processors' volume of selling whole birds declined to 20 percent in 1990 from 90 percent in 1962.

Chicken processors also have expanded their market share by exporting leg quarters to the Soviet Union and by increased demand for seasoned chicken wings.

To prevent losing market share to poultry or pork, Morgan said the salvation of the US beef industry will be efforts to boost exports to Japan, South Korea, Hong Kong and other Pacific Rim countries.

Morgan said the beef industry shouldn't be worried about US beef and veal exports still lagging behind imports because exports tend to be better-quality meat sold at higher prices. As of 1990, US exports totaled 5 percent of beef and veal production, while imports were at 9.5 percent.

Morgan's remarks, presented at the Farm Profit '91 Conference in Topeka Feb. 13, were summarized by KRF News.

Food Leaders Given News About Consumer Interest In Low-fat Ground Beef

Checkoff-funded research to develop low-fat ground beef technologies has already captured the attention of the federal school lunch program.

In addition, the five-city test marketing of the McLean Deluxe by McDonald's Corporation has captured consumer and food industry interest.

Now, a national survey indicates that knowledge of the low-fat ground beef has consumers interested in the product.

Results from a nationwide survey, conducted by The Gallup Organization on behalf of the Meat Board, were reported during a information symposium held in Baton Rouge, La.

The study found the average consumer is much more aware of low-fat ground beef than the industry had anticipated. Among those surveyed, 38 percent of the people were aware of a low-fat ground beef product and 25 percent were aware that low-fat ground beef was being test marketed in food-service outlets.

The survey also revealed that while there was a high awareness of low-fat ground beef, specific knowledge of the products is less impressive. When consumers were asked, "What have you heard about low-fat ground beef?", only 10 percent said that it was healthier. "This is definitely a marketing issue," says Sheila Courington, Meat Board director of market research. "There is high awareness, but not a lot of knowledge. When this product takes off, it's going to need a lot of information-building in the process."

The national survey also asked if consumers would be interested in purchasing low-fat ground beef. When given a description of the products, 87 percent of those asked said they would be willing to try it. When asked if they would be willing to try low-fat ground beef hamburger in a restaurant, 45 percent said yes and in a retail setting, 60 percent of those polled responded yes.

"The survey also found that there is a very positive net effect on beef, in general, created by the positive attitudes about low-fat ground beef," says Chuck Jones, a Wyoming cattleman and chairman of the Meat Board beef market research subcommittee. "I think this is extremely good news for our industry."

The two-day information symposium attracted more than 100 key decision-makers from the food and meat industries who were there to learn about the consumer market research and economic and technical information concerning the development and production of low-fat ground beef.

The information sessions focused on marketing research surrounding consumers' buying behavior and desires for low-fat food products, the economic impact of low-fat ground beef production to the industry and the specific technical information surrounding the inception and production of low-fat ground beef.

The participants from across the United States and Canada represented businesses involved in food processing, food ingredients, academics, meat packing, retail, research, food distribution, food export, media, advertising, and federal government programs.
