FOUNDATION FACTS

EIGHT ITEMS SOME OF US HAVE FORGOTTEN

- 1) A cow is a scavenger, which converts grass to protein-rich, nutrient-dense beef. She can do this efficiently with a supplement of protein and minerals and no grain.
- 2) A cow-man is anyone who correctly fits his cows to his environment, i.e., they breed young, and reproduce themselves regularly with minimal expense.
- 3) The environment and the task assigned to the cow determines ultimately the genetic finished weight on her steer progeny coming out of the feedlot.
- 4) It just so happens that beef cattle, which calve at 24 months over several generations under practical management, will produce steer progeny that genetically finish at the desired 1050-1250 weight, regardless of their environment of origin.
- 5) Cows that are required to be productive will put down enough back-fat to winter, calve and breed back under reasonable conditions. It just so happens that their steer progeny will, if fed a high-quality finishing ration starting at weaning, have just the right amount of intramuscular fat for tenderness and palatability.
- 6) Cattle selected for weight-for-age at weaning under practical conditions, will be heavy-weaning, heavy-milking, fertile, good converting high-cutability cattle. Cattle selected for weight-for-age as yearlings improve more rapidly than those selected for weaning weight.
- 7) It is said that a heifer can have a calf weighing about 7% of her body-weight. If the average heifer weighs 950-1000 at calving, that means we need calves averaging 65-70 pounds at birth or less. A bull that cannot be bred to heifers should not be bred to cows.
- 8) A cow from any beef breed adapted to her environment for several generations, from a line of females that calve at 24 months, bred for 90 days or less to a bull of the same breed that has been performance-tested under practical conditions will produce steer calves at or above the 90th percentile industry-wide and an optimum heifer calf to keep or sell. No EPD's or Composites needed. It's really pretty simple!
